The Sacred City of the Ethiopians: Being a Record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia (Classic Reprint) James Theodore Bent

The contest between Italy and Abyssinia is at the present moment so acute that the reminiscences of our expedition over the contested ground, just three years ago, cannot fail to awaken interest. Then the Italians appeared to be gradually but surely establishing a foothold in the Ethiopian Empire; now they seem to be barely able to hold what was in the first instance allotted to them by the Treaty of Ucciali. Last year saw them in possession of Adowa and Aksum, the sacred city of the Ethiopians, with the clerical party and the Echegue Theologos strongly in their favour. This year sees the sacred city once more under the direct influence of the Abyssinian Empire, and the ground immediately surrounding it has been the field on which most of the battles have been fought.
