The Sitka Incident Walt Larson

Theo sensed before he saw the faint line of white breaking the velveteen darkness about mid-way up the window. A sibilant hissing broke the silence. Fraught with danger, yet sounding so innocent, the noise grew until a roar filled the wheelhouse. Theo yanked the throttles to slow ahead, and grabbed a stanchion as he felt the boat being tugged toward that line that grew in height until it disappeared over the top of the window. The boat started to rise then shuddered to a stop as the swell hit them. My God! We're done! His mind screamed as the water crashed down. The wheelhouse windows shattered. Theo gasped and filled his lungs with air before water roared over his head.
