John Dominis (b. 1921) is an American documentary photographer, war photographer and photojournalist. Dominis studied cinematography at the University of Southern California. In 1943 he enlisted in the United States Air Force. After the war he worked as a freelance photographer for Life. In 1950 he went to Korea as a war photographer in the Korean War. Later he worked in Southeast Asia, in America, Africa and Europe. Dominis went to six Olympic Games. One of his best known pictures was shot during the 1968 Summer Olympics, when Dominis pictured Tommie Smith and John Carlos during their Black Power salute. Dominis worked for Life magazine during the Vietnam war and later also went to Woodstock. In the 1970s he worked for People magazine. From 1978 to 1982 he was an editor for the Sports Illustrated. Dominis stalked these cats for months, returning with a wealth of pictures of cats hunting their prey, courting their mates, and training their cubs. The 56 color photographs reproduced in this book serve as a memorable record of these unique creatures in a world that is increasingly hostile to all large wild animals. Co-author Edey describes the cat in detail, telling how it differs from other mammals and how it evolved over the ages to include the ordinary housecat as well as the regal lion. As a further aid to the reader, the book includes two genealogical charts on the evolution of carnivore and cats, plus reproductions of the paw-prints of the five largest African cats. The book discusses all ten wildcats found in Africa - the lion, leopard, cheetah, the serval, the caracal, the jungle cat, the sand cat, the golden cat, the black-footed cat, and the African wild cat.
